Re: Brendon Nolan.

I have known Brendon since November 2015. I find him to be a man with courage and integrity.

When I met Brendon, he was being discharged from hospital. It was a difficult time for him. His pain management medication was being withdrawn, so he was in constant pain. He would have to learn to cope at home on his own for most of the day, arrange and manage visits to hospital for treatment, and master living with one arm while working to regain the use of his injured arm.

Brendon is determined to do well, to recover as fully as he can and get on with his life. He recognises when he needs help and accepts it graciously when it is offered, but he is not one to sit back and play the helpless cripple.

Brendon had just recently begun a skilled job when he was injured, and intends to return to that job if at all possible when he has recovered.

I believe that he will do well in the future, given the opportunity and some guidance, and go on to be an example for others struggling to overcome serious injury.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Peter Cusack B.E. M.Sc.
